IMPORTANT TO STAMP COLLECTORS!

I HAVE TO THANK THE PHILATELISTS of Hawaii for the liberal appreciation which my late advertisement has received. It is safe to say that hundreds of thousands of Hawaiian Stamps have been sent away without receiving more than half their value in return, and what is far worse, every collector gets a quantity of useless duplicates. By the plan which I have so successfully worked up, everyone gets only such stamps as he needs; and besides, he gets full value for each and every kind of Hawaiian Stamp. The prices which I allow are better than those of ANY EUROPEAN DEALER, and are higher than most American Stamp Dealers pay.

I receive fresh sheets of stamps by every steamer, and will send them on request to any address. The prices for these stamps are as low as those of the largest dealers. Hawaiian Stamps are good for exchange, and it should be to the mutual interest of all our Philatelic friends to assist me in my efforts to make every hundred stamps bring only what will add to collections, and not a host of worthless duplicates.

In less than nine months I have an album of nearly Four Thousand specimens by confiding myself to the above plan.

THERE SEEMS TO BE SOMETHING IN IT, AFTER ALL.

Some Authors Excusable for Adopting a Pseudonym—No Poetry in "Longfellow"—"The Macaulay Flowers of Literature"—"Carp," "Gath," "Howard."

Sometimes a writer's name is so uncouth or so commonplace that it seems of itself unfitted for fame, and a pseudonym appears to be his only resource. It is hard to imagine a girl named Jenks making herself famous as a lyric poet, or a man named Meek becoming a world renowned novelist. The difficulty in such cases, however, are apt to be overestimated, and achievement of fame with such drawbacks, while it may be hard, is by no means impossible. We are apt to accept things as we find them, and to think them fitting because they were always to us as they are. Knowledge of the work a writer has done has a magical effect upon his name, and just as the old lady approved Adam's judgment and discrimination in calling the inhabitant of the pen "pig," since "pig" is such an appropriate name for such a dirty, repulsive, disagreeable animal," so we are apt to approve the names that masters of the other pen possess, because we have always confused the name with the work it represents.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

Probably there is not a reformed person in America to whom the name "Longfellow," for instance, does not, without consideration, suggest a poetic idea. We think beyond the name, and of the poetry of the writer; and yet, "Longfellow," when it is considered by itself, is not a poetic word, while its counterpart, "Shortfellow," is rather ridiculous. "Macaulay" seems, no doubt, to almost every one, a refined and stylish name, which would give any writer a long start toward making for himself a good reputation. The contemporaries of the historian, however, did not find his name impressive, or Punch when he first began to write would never have suggested that his essays were "the Macaulay flowers of literature." "Tennyson" is by no means so poetic a name as "Whittier," but the fame of his work has made the English laureate seem the equal, if not the superior, of the New England poet in this respect. Not to multiply instances, such common names as Smith, Black, Green and Lamb, names so incongruous as Cable and Mody, and so uncouth as Keats and Platt, have, with hosts of others equally ineligible, been given a share of immortality. When a man named Stubbs can make his name famous as an historian and a scholar, no writer need despair because his fate did not make him a DeQuincy, an Aldrich, or a Bryant, instead of a Jones or a Jenkinson.

The man makes the name rather than the name the man. Still a good name is always an advantage, and in choosing a signature the young writer must decide whether he will conquer fate with the name his sponsors gave him, or whether he will choose a pseudonym that will put a Jenkins at once on a level with a Hawthorne or a Carlyle.

STICK TO IT ALWAYS.

When once he has chosen his name, however, be it his own by right of baptism, or a fictitious choice, he should stick to it always and forever. Some brains may be weighty enough to make more than one name immortal, but the trouble is generally of another kind. Writers who have habitually used more than one name have generally acknowledged their error after a time, and have devoted themselves to one signature, dropping all others. A well known Washington newspaper correspondent a year or more ago was writing to The Cleveland Leader a series of widely quoted letters, which he was signing "Carp," another series of letters he was signing "F. G. C.," and a series of articles for a newspaper syndicate he was signing with his full name, "Frank G. Carpenter." One day it dawned upon him he was doing the work of three men, making a reputation for three writers, and getting the credit for only one-third of the work he did. From that day on he has wisely signed everything he has written with his real name in full.

Sometimes there is an advantage to a newspaper writer in signing his articles simply with his last name. His signature then has to the uninitiated the appearance of a good pseudonym, while to those who are better informed it recalls the personality of the writer. "Howard" pursues this plan. "Carleton" and "Perley," two other well known newspaper writers, chose their middle names. "Gath" modified his initials into a signature that his letters have made famous. In each case there is something about the signature that suggests the writer himself, and he gets the advantage of a pseudonym, and of his own signature at the same time.—William H. Hills in The Writer.

Industrial Insurance.

In these days life insurance of all kinds has become so common that the poorest and most ignorant laborer would laugh at the idea of a policy being a forerunner of ill luck, just as the modern Jack Tar laughs at the idea of misfortune following a voyage commenced on a Friday. Indeed, the laborer now has insurance brought to his own door, but its solicitors first and its collectors afterward follow him to his factory and to his shop, ready to insure not only himself, but his wife, his babe in the cradle, his girls in short clothes, his boys in knickerbockers and "his sisters and his cousins and his aunts." This is "Industrial Insurance," ready to insure any one from the pauper infant to the hoary headed grandfather of 70, at a weekly rate of from five cents upward.

There are three companies only in New York city that transact what is known as Industrial Insurance business. They are all conducted upon the same principle of granting insurance upon the lives of infants, children and adults, at weekly premiums of from five to fifty cents, being for a young man of 21 insurance of $98 at death for five cents a week, or $900 for fifty cents a week.—New York Press.

Scene at the Custom House.

A young and very pretty widow, dressed in elegant mourning, stood by an open trunk at the custom house the other morning. A lynx eyed woman inspector was going through the spoils of Paris. Presently her nostrils quivered. She scented game, and pulled out a package of kid gloves of various colors and tints. "These are not for your own use, madam!" "Why not?" asked the lady, an ominous pink spot coming to each cheek. "You can see they are my size," holding out a dainty little hand. There was a you-can't-come-over-me expression on the other's face as she replied: "People dressed as you are do not wear colored gloves." "Ah," said the pretty widow, with contempt, "do you suppose I'm going to wear mourning the rest of my life?" The inspector was crushed, and replaced the gloves of the lady from Pittsburgh.—New York Press.

Men More Liable to Consumption.

Dr. Mays has collected statistics for many of the American cities, and also for other countries, and finds that, so far as they go, they establish the fact beyond a doubt that in civilized life the male sex is more liable to pulmonary consumption than the female.—Popular Science News.
